

DREAD: DINOSAUR EDITION

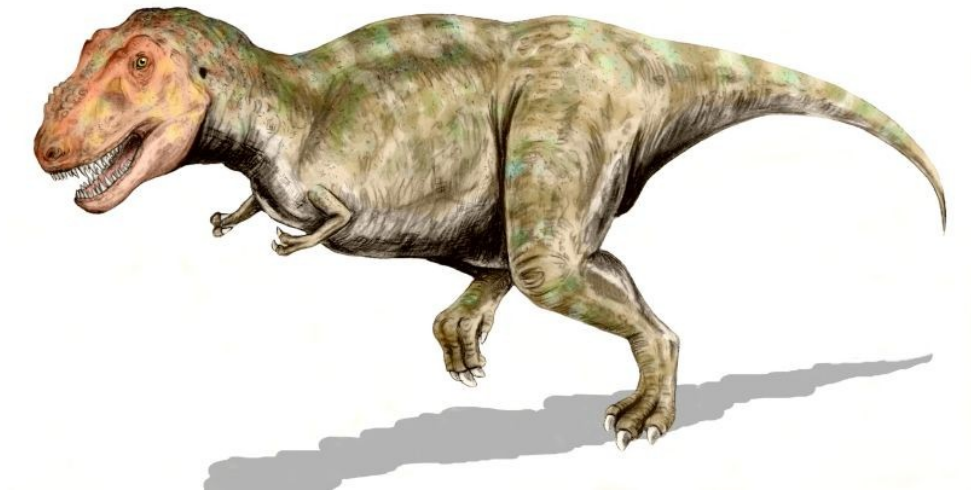

It's the late Cretaceous period, and the Dinosaur Kingdom is in trouble. A strange, ominous new light has appeared in the sky. Tyrannosaurus, the King of the Dinosaurs, has called together representatives of all of the species to come to the Dinosaur Court to discuss the problem. Who will survive and evolve, and who will go extinct, as the Age of the Dinosaurs comes to an end?

This is a scenario for the Dread roleplaying game. You'll need the basic rulebook for Dread, as well as a wooden block tower game (e.g. Jenga) to play. The attached player questionnaires will get your characters set up.

Though the paleontologists in your gaming group might disagree, this game is meant to be played with dinosaur characters who are mildly anthropomorphized and reasonably intelligent. In the Dinosaur Kingdom, all of the dinosaurs can speak to each other in the Saurian language. Dinosaurs have various jobs within dinosaur society, which may resemble real-world jobs to any degree you like. Low-level technology (such as paper, knives, and houses) exists, but any player wanting to have something more sophisticated (a car, a phone, etc) would need to make a pull or two for it.

Question 6 on all of the player questionnaires is very important – make sure every player demonstrates their dinosaur roar before the game begins!

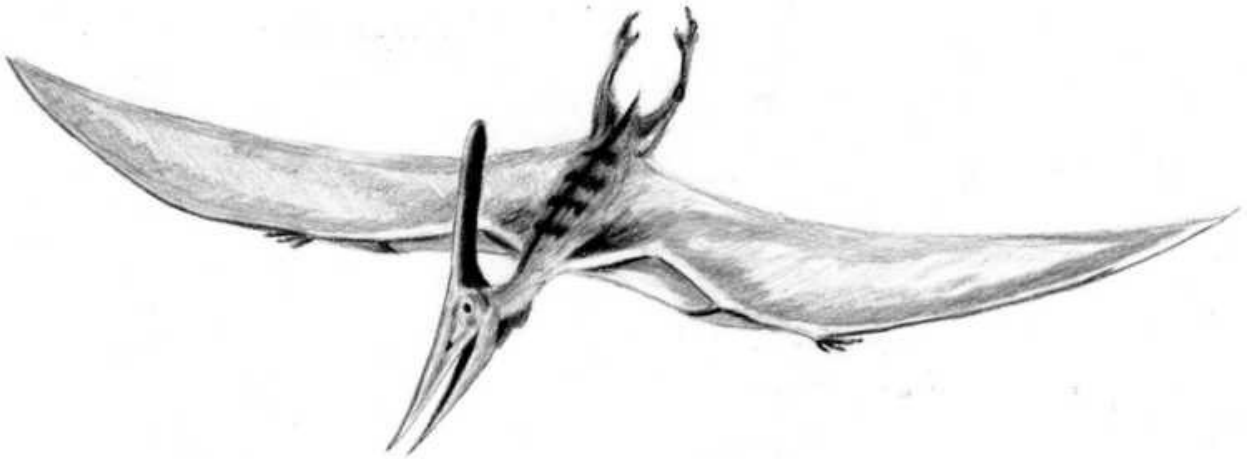

Name: _____

Species: Tyrannosaurus

Role: The King

1. You're the king of the dinosaurs! Why do all of the other dinosaurs think you're a great king?
2. You have some object which is very precious to you, and which symbolizes your kingship. What is it?
3. While Dinosaur Court is in session, the other dinosaurs have to follow the rules you make, or else you get very annoyed and flustered. What is the most important rule for proper behavior in Dinosaur Court?
4. There is one other player dinosaur who you would trust with your life. Who is it, and why do you trust them so much?
5. Sometimes being king is hard. What would you rather be doing right now if you weren't the king of the dinosaurs?
6. What does your dinosaur roar sound like?

Name: _____

Species: Pteranodon

Role: The Ambassador

1. The League of Reptiles That Are Not Technically Dinosaurs gave you a special mission when they made you ambassador to the Dinosaur Court. What is it, and why haven't you completed it yet?
2. There is one habit that many dinosaurs have that you find disgusting and appalling. What is it?
3. Once you finish your term as Ambassador to the Dinosaur Court, you plan to retire from politics. What will you do with your life once you're retired?
4. You're not technically a dinosaur, so you speak Saurian with an accent. Once you said something that was accidentally offensive or shocking to another player dinosaur. Who was it, and what did you say?
5. You think you'd make a better King of the Dinosaurs than Tyrannosaurus. Why?
6. What does your not-technically-a-dinosaur roar sound like?
